Save Venice

"Today people think it's all 'Italian' furniture," says dealer Helen Costantino Fioratti. "But before Garibaldi, there were a bunch of duchies and principalities." Each region had its distinctive style, she explains, especially Venice. "There you see all the excitement over China, complete fantasy. They were letting their imaginations run rampant." Fioratti has a pair of 17th-century upholstered Venetian chairs and an 18th-century pinball machine for $38,000, shown here.

Concrete Jungle

Venezuelan-born garden designer Miguel Pons specializes in extreme gardening—on the terraces of New York City. Despite the drying winds buffeting one client's penthouse apartment overlooking the Statue of Liberty, Pons has planted its three terraces like cottage gardens, with rambling roses, ornamental grasses and Virginia creeper. "I always like everything to be as natural as possible," says Pons. "A little on the wild side."

At the Plate

This month, Bulgari unveils its first-ever home collection, featuring a full range for the dining room—glassware, flatware and dinnerware—as well as ceramic tabletop pieces including these platters, in the Mani al vento pattern inspired by Bulgari scarves. The collection is available at Neiman Marcus and select Bulgari stores.

Seventies Plus

If mid-century modern is starting to grow old—all that Eames and Aalto everywhere—try the Seventies. Albrizzi's acrylic drinks tables, block lamps and cigarette boxes scream Jet Set. The classic line is being reissued by New York architect Peter Vaughn, who ferreted out vintage Albrizzi molds and even the original factory in New Rochelle that hand-pours the acrylic.

Luce Change

Marston Luce is for those who love the French countryside, from the 18th century to the Fifties. Luce, whose clients include Deeda Blair, Jo Carole Lauder and Barbara Walters, found this late 19th-century jardiniere, ($3,200 for the pair), in Languedoc. "People hear the word French and they immediately think of Louis XV and all that gold," says Luce. "That's not us at all."
